Major Watkins, one of the United States Inspectors of Indian Agencies, passed last evening, says the Silver State of the 16th, on his way to Pyramid Lake and Walker River Reservations. He was accompanied by Captain Palmer, Indian Agent at Maggie Creek Reservation, near Carson, who inquired for Nachez, the Piute Chief and farmer, with a view of getting the Inspector to take an interest in his behalf and assist him in getting a crop on his ranch on the Big Meadows.

The Enterprise of the 17th says the first strawberries of the season arrived at Virginia on Saturday morning. They were shipped from San Francisco and were very fine. They sold readily at $1.25 per pound. At the present price they are luxury in which but the wealthy or the reckless few are likely to indulge. With such weather as prevailed in the city yesterday strawberries do not seem out of place, even though snow-banks are still visible on the slopes of Mount Davidson and on the sides of most of the surrounding hills.

The case of Marshall, says the Virginia Chronicle of the 15th, who was tried for woman-beating in Moses' court yesterday, resulted in the acquittal of the defendant by the jury. The woman had been an inmate of a house on D street, but Marshall had promised to take her out and live with her as a husband if she would leave the life she was living. She screened him as much as possible while on the witness stand, and although she had a black eye from the stroke of his fist, she swore that she had first bitten his hand while intoxicated, and that the stroke was accidental.

Virginia Enterprise: The Piutes intend having a grand fandango shortly on Walker river in celebration of the arrival or at least the near approach of Spring. The Indians living in this region will attend in force, and their ancient enemies, the Washoes, residing in the neighborhood of Carson City, will be invited to attend the grand "Spring opening" in order to see the fashions and that the annual "funeral" of the traditional hatchet may be duly observed. The Piute belles of the towns of the Comstock will no doubt create a great sensation among their rural friends by the gaudiness of their calico gowns, while the "bucks" will probably attract equal attention by the gorgeousness of their blankets, the altitude of their "ping" hats and their superior adroitness in the manipulation of the cards in Piute poker.

Virginia Footlight: There was a report current on the streets that the Justice Company was going to weed out by the wholesale a certain nationality of men who had been detected in stealing the richest of the ore and carrying it off in their dinner buckets. The ore in the Justice varies a good deal, some of it being as rich as any on the lead, while the average of what is milled does not work up to much above thirty dollars a ton. Some streaks are worth a thousand dollars a ton, and it is in such that the miners are reported to have loaded their dinner pails. There are about six hundred men employed in the Justice, and would be singular if in that number some were not found who would improve the opportunity to double their monthly income by peculation. If a miner were to take but five pounds a day of the thousand-dollar rock, at the end of the month he would have seventy-five dollars' worth, which, added to his monthly salary, would be quite a neat little income for an unskilled miner.

Virginia Chronicle: A large-sized photograph exposed in Manning's window, on South C street, for some days past, has attracted considerable attention. It is taken from a drawing by J. B. Pitchford, chief engineer of the Chollar-Norcross-Savage Combination shaft, showing the "skeet," the vehicle used to raise the rock from the bottom of the shaft. The skeet is a large sheet-iron box, capable of holding about six car-loads of rock. Being attached to two reels it raises to the surface, in a round trip, twelve times as much as a single engine with a car and cage. It does not require to be handled in any way, as it runs smoothly along the guides, is never removed from the shaft, and is self-dumping. Introduced at the Combination shaft by Superintendent I. L. Requa about a year ago, it has been thoroughly tested and found to be the best contrivance known for raising large quantities of rock in an expeditious and economical manner. The photograph gives five views of the skeet, two of which show it in a dumping position; a third view shows it going down the shaft, and the other shows the skeet by itself.
